Develop Israel with Israel Bonds

THE JERUSALEM POST

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1952. 3 Shikar, 3721. 3 Jemel Tam, 1952.

THE new famous "wind of change" blowing across Africa seems to have hit the Central African Federation like a hurricane INDABA came with the publication of the Monckton Report. This is to serve as a basis for negotiations on the future of the Federation of Southern and Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland — which are due to begin in London in two weeks' time. One of the main findings of the Report submitted by the 26 members of the Commission was that the aim of inter-racial partnership, which had been at the heart of the plan of establishing the Federation seven years ago, had not been fulfilled. If the federal structure were to be retained, which the Commission found desirable both from the economic point of view and in order not to put "finis" to the hope of partnership, many changes would have to be introduced. This, naturally, satisfies neither the protagonists of the Central African Federation, notably the Federal Prime Minister, Sir Roy Welensky, nor the Premier of Southern Rhodesia, Sir Edgar Whitehead, nor the Africans, to whom the word "federation" has become a term of abuse, as the Report notes.

Reacting under the shock, a number of steps were taken in Southern Rhodesia to meet the grievances of the Africans, the four major ones being: land, housing, unemployment, racial discrimination and a lack of any say in the government of the country. Some of these measures have, to the outsider, an "Alice Through the Looking Glass" touch about them. In order to deal with the question of land-shortage, which owes its origin to the Land Apportionment Act of 1890 protecting the rights of European farmers, the government has inaugurated a legislation which limits the number of African farmers. No accompanying measures were introduced to protect the Africans thus left without employment — estimated at about 30,000.

Dissatisfied with the government's approach to the problem, a group of private individuals in Southern Rhodesia decided to make a last minute attempt at multi-racial understanding by organizing an indaba which took place in Salisbury at the beginning of this month. Whether it was a good idea to use the word "indaba" (parley in the vernacular), with its evocation of Cecil Rhodes and the suppression of the 1950-51 riots, is debatable. The report on the five-day parley has just been published and shows a surprising and hopeful degree of agreement between the white and black parties who were almost equally represented. There are 175,000 Europeans in Southern Rhodesia out of a total of 2,650,000. The white population of the entire Federation numbers 220,000, and there are about seven million Africans.

The indaba decided that unfair racial discrimination must be ended; Africans must be given an equal say in the government; the franchise should be broadened to include all Africans; the franchise should be broadened to include all Africans; the franchise should be broadened to include all Africans.

Country's Rabbis to Meet On Chief Rabbinate Impasse

By MAIR KRAVITZ, Jerusalem Post Reporter
TEL AVIV. — The Rump Chief Rabbinate Council on Sunday night decided to convene an emergency rally of the country's rabbis. It is understood that the rally will be held in Jerusalem next week.

The Council meeting was held at the home of Rabbi Meir Kahane, 100, Tel Aviv. The Council, which is composed of representatives of the various rabbinical courts, is currently in a state of impasse over the appointment of a new Chief Rabbi. The Council has been unable to reach a decision on the matter for several months.

The Council's decision to hold an emergency rally is seen as a move to break the deadlock. The rally is expected to draw representatives from all the major rabbinical courts in the country. The Council has also decided to hold a series of discussions with the various rabbinical courts in order to reach a compromise.

NRP Dismayed By Separation Scheme

Jerusalem Post Reporter
TEL AVIV. — The report that Prime Minister Ben-Gurion and some of his cabinet colleagues consider the time ripe for pressing for the separation of religion and state has caused an uproar in religious circles and split opinion amongst rabbinical circles and National Religious Party politicians.

A source high in the NRP told the Jerusalem Post that the party is deeply dismayed by the report. The source said that the party's position is that the separation of religion and state is a matter of principle, and that the party will oppose any move to separate the two. The source also said that the party is concerned that the report might lead to a split in the party.

Colour Problem for Soviet Communism

The current Soviet aim in these countries is not to foment Communist revolution, not to search for "pure revolutionary process" (i.e. revolution without social elements) where none exists. The aim is to encourage "natural" processes. For the moment this means drawing the countries into the orbit of the western economic and political sphere; to deny the West trade access to Africa's wealth of diamonds, copper, tin; to support in the United Nations; and, most important, to deny the West access to Africa's greatest wealth — its young people, which is to be sent to absorb and develop their young countries. Moscow is out to

Perhaps most important from the Soviet point of view, a personal, centralised government is a better avenue for infiltration and influence by a few strategically placed advisers. If their advice is taken by a Lumumba, for example, it becomes policy for the whole country. Central control of press, radio, police, economic planning — here is a situation congenial to Moscow. Shervin, commenting on the report in "The New York Times" about an American plan for bringing about Arab-Israeli peace, writes: "Because we were always on the defensive and never made many demands, while our opponents never ceased demanding, exerting pressure and denying our elementary rights, it turns out that in order to achieve peace, we are obliged to give what we cannot give, in return for which the Arabs are to agree to recognize the existence of a Middle Eastern reality that they cannot change.... The Arabs must make clear that it is not us that we 'received too much' and must return something, and that we will not commit ourselves on the refugee question to further the cause of peace, the few illusions Western leaders, and Arab rulers will have.... about making a Middle East settlement at our expense."

Shas'rim (Ponai Agudat Yisrael) says that any attempt to bring about Arab-Israeli peace must be conducted carefully. But, the paper continues, "if we are asked to sacrifice our security for the peace we desire, then we will of course have to stand the sword of the sword. We consider the attempt as we have rejected similar attempts in the past."
